What should a process for a respectful and empowering engagement with communities at environmental risk involve? How to navigate successfully through partnerships with key national and international actors? What must successful follow-up processes consider?

This workshop will create a space for exposure to some environmental rights violations that show the relevance and importance of exploring and challenging the underpinning key concepts of participation and empowerment. It will have an inductive approach in which participants will choose a real case from session one and engage in each session’s role-playing simulations.

Friday, 2:30-6:30 pm
3/18-4/1/22, HHH 184

Who Should Take This Course?
The workshop is appropriate for those graduate students interested in enhancing their capacities for engaging in Human Rights work from an international and comparative perspective.